

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A network device constructs an outgoing resource reservation message and determines an authentication value, using, for example, a cryptographic algorithm and at least a portion of the outgoing message. The network device identifies a destination node for the message and inserts the authentication value in the message. The network device sends the message across a network to the destination node for authentication at the destination node using the authentication value.